Dear parents and carers,

We have spent a long time over the last few months discussing homework at Oxenhope.

Some of you may remember when I appealed for opinions about homework in general and thank you to all the parents who gave really insightful information about this issue and how it affects family life.

Homework is a notoriously difficult subject in schools because it is very difficult to find a way to please all families, all of the time. I have, however, written a policy that takes into account my own vision for the school, parent and carers opinion, and the views of the children and staff. I published this document in draft before the summer holidays and asked for feedback from parents, and found that families were generally pleased with the policy.

Therefore, homework will start to be given to your children this week. Please re-familiarise yourself with the policy so you are fully aware of the expectations for your child in their current class.

Please keep a dialogue with your child's class teacher about homework. Working in partnership is a vital part of ensuring your child succeeds.

Many thanks,

Mrs Jones
